

Log Home Plans

First, consider the home you currently live in. Make a list of the pros and cons of every aspect of your home. Are the bedrooms too small? Do you love the detail work in the bathroom? Create a wish list based on the best aspects of the different homes you've lived in. This will be a great beginners guide to help you decide which of the log home plans are best for you. Keep in mind that even if you don't get everything on your list, this is still a good starting point to keep your priorities in mind.

Second, you'll want to consider how big the lot of land you have is. If you haven't already bought the land that your log house will sit on, you'll need to do your research. Look in the areas you want to live and figure out how much the land there costs. You'll then figure out how much you can afford. Before choosing from the log home plans, you need to know how much space you'll have to work with.

Next, you will want to take a look at pre-made log home plans. You'll likely want to look at plans that have been implemented in real life, so that you can see pictures of how these homes turned out. Select a few that you think might be right for you and take the time to carefully consider them. If you find one type of log home plan that works in one aspect and one that works in another, you can probably find a way to combine those elements.

Once you've narrowed your log home plans options down to one, you'll need to decide if you want any add ons. For example, perhaps you want a basement. Adding a basement is one of the most cost-effective ways to add square footage to your home. Even if you don't have the money initially to carpet it and paint it, you can always save those things for later. You might also consider add ons like additional bedrooms or fireplaces. Keep in mind that anything you add will cost extra, but don't be afraid to really focus on getting what you want.

If you're sure to follow these steps when choosing your log home plans, you'll be in a good position to find the plans that will turn into the home of your dreams. If there aren't perfect plans out there, simply take a look at what is out there and figure out what could be improved upon for you. You can then have log home plans drawn up specifically for your home to ensure that not only is your home one of a kind, but it is the best it possibly can be for your family.